For example, if someone has a bumper sticker that says "I'm not afraid of the government," it's a pretty good bet that they're paranoid and distrustful of authority. If someone has a bumper sticker that says "Jesus is my co-pilot," it's a pretty good bet that they're religious and conservative. And if someone has a bumper sticker that says "Honk if you love boobs," it's a pretty good bet that they're immature and looking for attention.

Of course, not all bumper stickers are so easy to interpret. But if you pay attention to the overall message that someone is trying to convey, you can usually get a pretty good idea of what kind of person they are. And if you're not sure, it's always better to err on the side of caution and avoid them altogether.

So the next time you're driving down the road, take a look at the bumper stickers on the cars around you. If you see someone with more than three bumper stickers, be careful. They're probably not someone you want to mess with.

Here are some of the most common bumper sticker types and what they say about the people who display them:

- Political bumper stickers: These bumper stickers show support for a particular political party, candidate, or cause. They can be a good way to show your support for your beliefs, but they can also be divisive and lead to conflict.
- Religious bumper stickers: These bumper stickers express the owner's religious beliefs. They can be a way to show your faith, but they can also be seen as proselytizing or judgmental.
- Humorous bumper stickers: These bumper stickers are designed to make people laugh. They can be a fun way to show your sense of humor, but they can also be offensive or inappropriate.

- Bumper stickers that promote a business or product: These bumper stickers are designed to promote a business or product. They can be a good way to get your name out there, but they can also be seen as spammy or intrusive.
- Bumper stickers that express a personal opinion: These bumper stickers express the owner's personal opinion on a particular topic. They can be a way to share your thoughts and feelings, but they can also be seen as preachy or self-righteous.

Ultimately, the type of bumper stickers that you choose to display on your car is a personal decision. However, it's important to be aware of the message that you're sending to others. If you're not sure what a particular bumper sticker means, it's always better to err on the side of caution and avoid it altogether.

Here are some tips for spotting the people who are likely to cause you trouble:

- They have more than three bumper stickers on their car. This is a sign that they're probably passionate about their beliefs, and they're not afraid to show it. However, it can also be a sign that they're inflexible and unwilling to compromise.
- Their bumper stickers are offensive or hateful. This is a clear sign that they're not someone you want to be around. If they're willing to display such hateful messages on their car, they're probably not going to be very kind or understanding towards others.
- They're driving a car that's in poor condition. This is a sign that they're probably not very responsible or reliable. If they don't take care of their own car, they're probably not going to take care of you either.

- They're driving aggressively. This is a sign that they're probably angry and impatient. If they're willing to put others at risk on the road, they're probably not going to be very considerate of your feelings either.

If you see someone who fits any of these criteria, it's best to avoid them altogether. They're probably not someone you want to be around.

Of course, there are always exceptions to the rule. But if you're looking for a general rule of thumb, it's best to be wary of people who have more than three bumper stickers on their car. They're probably not someone you want to mess with.
