What is a Will?

A will is a legal document that outlines your wishes for the distribution of your assets after your death. It can also name an executor, who will be responsible for carrying out your wishes.

There are many different types of wills, and the best one for you will depend on your individual circumstances. Some common types of wills include:

- Simple wills: These wills are typically used by people who have a small estate and few assets.
- Complex wills: These wills are more complex and are often used by people who have a large estate or complex financial arrangements.
- Testamentary trusts: These wills create a trust that will be managed by a trustee after your death. This can be a good option for people who want to control how their assets are distributed.

What is a Trust?

A trust is a legal arrangement that allows you to transfer your assets to a trustee, who will then manage them for the benefit of the beneficiaries.

There are many different types of trusts, and the best one for you will depend on your individual circumstances. Some common types of trusts include:

- Revocable trusts: These trusts can be changed or revoked at any time by the grantor.
- Irrevocable trusts: These trusts cannot be changed or revoked after they have been created.
- Testamentary trusts: These trusts are created in a will and take effect after the grantor's death.

What is Real Estate Planning?

Real estate planning is the process of making arrangements for the ownership and transfer of your real estate assets. This can include creating a will, trust, or other legal documents.

Real estate planning is important because it can help you to:

- Avoid probate, which is the court process of distributing your assets after your death.
- Minimize estate taxes.
- Control how your real estate assets are distributed.
- Protect your assets from creditors.
